WHERE EVERYONE STANDS

THE OCT. 27 DEADLINE for agencies to begin issuing new identification cards is days away. While most small and micro agencies are utilizing one of the two shared-services providers—either the General Services Administration or the Interior Department’s National Business Center—a number of large departments are going it alone. The following is a list of what each agency is doing, based on phone calls, e-mails, and GSA and NBC statements:

NOTES:

The departments of Defense and Veterans Affairs were given authority by the Office of Management and Budget to issue transitional ID cards because the agencies have already implemented smart-card systems. The Justice Department did not respond by press time.
